

City of Orlando Realizes Finance and HR Benefits With Workday Cloud

Streamlines Operations and Increases Employee Engagement With Real-Time Data in One Unified System

PLEASANTON, CA--(Marketwired - Nov 3, 2014) - Workday, Inc. (NYSE: WDAY), a leader in enterprise cloud applications for finance and human resources, announced today that the City of Orlando has seen greater efficiencies, improved management of costs and resources, and increased employee engagement with Workday's unified suite of applications, including Workday Financial Management and Workday Human Capital Management (HCM).

Orlando is one of the largest cities in Florida with more than 3,300 full-time government employees and 55 million visitors each year. Prior to deploying Workday, Orlando was using financial and HR systems with multiple bolt-on applications and integrations that were expensive and cumbersome to maintain. With so many disparate systems, administrative tasks such as spend management, absence management, payroll processing, and reporting had become increasingly complex and time-consuming.

Recognizing the benefits of applications built natively for the cloud, the City of Orlando selected and deployed Workday's unified suite for finance and HR, and is benefiting from:

- Improved Business Processes and Control

With Workday's built-in business process framework, the City of Orlando has standardized and streamlined finance and HR operations across all departments, reducing paper-based practices and duplicative efforts. This has enabled the City to increase accountability and significantly minimize the effort required to accurately manage administrative tasks such as payroll processing. Additionally, as changes occur within departments, City management now has the flexibility to easily configure business processes to meet new requirements within minutes, such as updating an approval chain or adjusting payroll cost allocations.

- Clearer Visibility into Costs

With finance and HR data in one unified system, the City of Orlando is able to more accurately create cost projections and has improved coordination between procurement and accounts payable. For example, employees in the City's finance department can see where transactions and vendor payments are in Workday without having to sort through separate systems. The City is also able to analyze data using Worktags, which has allowed it to assign keywords to different transactions and group, track, and reconcile activities based on these words.

- Mobile and Self-Service Capabilities for Employees

Prior to Workday, employees could only access the City of Orlando's financial and HR systems from City buildings connected to a network. With Workday, the majority of City workers can now view real-time data and perform administrative tasks from any device and location, at any time of day. For example, traveling employees can submit expenses in real-time by taking a photo of a receipt and submitting it electronically on their mobile phone. Additionally, managers can view dashboards, and review and approve business processes including time off requests, purchase requisitions, and expense reports from their tablet.

Comments on the News

"By moving to Workday, we are seeing a positive shift in the way we work to serve our community," said Orlando Mayor Buddy Dyer. "We're benefiting from being cloud-first and empowering our employees with access to real-time insights so they can make the best decisions for our City's future."

"The City of Orlando is an excellent example of how cities and other government entities can benefit from unifying finance and HR in the cloud," said Randy Hendricks, president, Education and Government, Workday. "With Workday, the City of Orlando has reduced the complexity and cost of running finance and HR on their legacy systems, while increasing the insights employees need to better serve residents and visitors."
